The international character of this service which was engaged in cutting fuel for refugees was one of its most worthwhile aspects. Not only was this first real exchange of ideas with volunteers from six other lands a most worthwhile experience for the Germans, but also the foreign volunteers experienced something no less deep, getting to know for the first time for many years something of the different side of Germany. On this joint venture, where each was giving of his best the spirit of IZD fused the representatives of many lands together in a most successful service.
